Forecast Discussion: High pressure will return to peak strength heading into the midweek. Light offshore winds are present for the start of the day before becoming onshore later today. Triple digit temperatures will remain widespread for inland locations today. Further warming will occur for Wednesday with light to moderate offshore winds present. Some inland locations could see daytime highs nearing daily records tomorrow afternoon.

Extended Forecast Discussion: Temperatures will remain elevated for Thursday before troughing begins to dive in from the Pacific Northwest. Significant cooling will arrive for Friday with a more persistent onshore wind pattern developing. Seasonably warm conditions will return around Saturday with low pressure bringing slightly breezy winds and slight chances for showers heading into next week.
